not easy to see them what they are without being sorry for them. A distinguished writer says the world is all full of fools from nadir to zenith. And burlesques abound everywhere. There's not a good or true thing in humanity that has not its caricature. "Virtue itself turns vice, being misapplied." The illegitimate sublime quickly becomes the ridiculous.

The eccentric or wrong-headed is nearer to the monomaniae than to the burlesque. Though the monomaniac is a burlesque, no estate in the real property of his deas when he puts on Pompey, Caesar, or ceased wife unless there was a child born Alexander the Great, assumes the god, As to the personal property, he acquires all of this, whether a child be born or not, subject, however, to her debts, Sec-
